The Disability Discrimination Act

Part III of the DDA gives disabled people equal rights of access to everyday services that others take for granted.

From 1st October 2004 it will be an offence not to have made reasonable adjustments to the physical features of your premises, to allow disabled people access to your services.

One of the most restrictive factors is the need to overcome a change in level. This is where Dolphin can help. Our independent status means that we can advise on a complete range of public access solutions from the leading suppliers worldwide.
